BCM Success Leads to New Appointment

The continuing growth of rural property specialists BCM, based in Sutton Scotney, have led to them appointing Chris Horn to their rural land management team. He has a specific remit to provide rural valuations for banks, individual clients and other lending institutions, as well as being involved with the continuing growth of the firms' estate management and general practice work.

Chris has the ideal background and track record to take on this role coming from a well established arable farming family near Droxford.

Chris was educated in Hampshire and after a gap year which included playing rugby on tour in South Africa and working on a sheep and arable farm in New Zealand, he attended Harper Adams University College and studied a four year degree in Rural Enterprise and Land Management.

Chris has a wealth of experience in the industry, including working as the harvest reporter for Farmers Weekly during the summer of 2002, working for BBC's Countryfile programme in 2003 and a university placement with BCM from 2003 to 2004. Chris has spent the past 4 ½ years working for a major national firm of surveyors in the north east, specialising in rural estate management for private and institutional clients and valuation work, in particular for the AMC and other lenders, as well as working in the sales and lettings departments.

Chris qualified in 2007 as MRICS and extended this success in the same year with top results in the north of England for the Central Association of Agricultural Valuers (CAAV) exams and became a Fellow.

Andrew Bays, partner at BCM, said "We are delighted that Chris came back to Hampshire and joined BCM. His arrival marks a further stage in BCM's continuing growth in all aspects of rural property management, including expanding our rural valuation offering."
