RPA digital mapping review raises concerns

The RPA have embarked on a review of the mapping of all the land held in the Rural Land Register – in more common parlance, they are doing the red line maps again. This brings considerable concern as to what field sizes they are going to come up with, particularly as we have seen an increasing hard line attitude from the RPA on such matters in recent months, even when they are wrong.

BCM, rural property specialists operating throughout southern England, are able to offer their digital mapping services to view client's fields using the most up to date mapping information together with aerial photographs. This enables BCM to provide an accurate and swift response to any problems that the RPA may raise.

Tom Tyrwhitt-Drake from BCM comments "We have found our digital mapping capabilities invaluable to our clients. This enables us to provide accurate speedy checks on the field information the RPA provide. It is particularly useful where it is necessary to prove historic information and compare it with the current situation.

For further information please contact Tom Tyrwhitt-Drake at BCM on 01962 763900.
