BCM Takes on Architectural Student

BCM, rural property specialists, has taken on an Architectural Student to help in their very busy Architectural Department. Edward Hemmings is currently at Liverpool University just about to start his 3rd year studying for a BA in Architecture. He has high hopes of getting excellent results as he came out of his second year with a first in the end of term exams.

Now he is hard at work helping with planning applications, drafting plans and elevations and generally learning all about working within an Architectural Office. He said "I am delighted to have been given the opportunity to work in this small but very busy office and I am learning a great deal which will be of incredible value to me in the future."

James Fraser, Partner at BCM and head of the Architectural Department, said " This office is indeed exceptionally busy and Edward has been a great help in all aspects of our work. We will definitely miss him when he goes back to University."
