BCM open office on Isle of Wight

BCM, the rural property specialists operating throughout Southern England, have seen continuous business growth in the last few years, in spite of the recession. Now they are delighted to announce the opening of a new office on the Isle of Wight. The partner in charge will be James Attrill, who is a well known rural property consultant based on the Island.

BCM already has several clients on the Isle of Wight and the new office will mean that James will not only be able to service his existing clients but will now be able to offer them the full range of services that BCM can provide.

James comes with an excellent track record of his own. He comes from a long standing Isle of Wight farming family and graduated from London University with a BSc Honours Degree in Agriculture. He worked in Wiltshire for a national rural agent for 19 years as part of their rural business management team, advising a client base of farms and estates across south and south-western England. He left as an associate partner in 2007 to return to the Isle of Wight.

Returning to the family farm, James took a directorship with Christopher Scott Ltd Chartered Surveyors building up a specialist Land Agency and Agribusiness department with an extensive client base on the Island and beyond.

James Attrill comments, "I am delighted to open an office on the Island for BCM as their traditionally strong links with the Isle of Wight, the benefit of a Winchester office and a wide range of specialist services for farmers and landowners made it a natural choice to join with them."

Iain Curry, Managing Partner of BCM, comments “ This is a natural move for us given the similarity of the current services we provide. The new office offers us the ability to further expand our business and the opportunity to offer a fuller range of services on the Isle of Wight than we currently provide, including additions such as rural residential lettings and farm sales. James has the same business ethos as BCM and we are very excited that we will be working together.”
