BCM Opens New Office on Isle of Wight

BCM, the rural property specialists operating throughout Southern England, have seen continuous business growth in the last few years, in spite of the recession. Now they are delighted to announce the opening of a new office on the Isle of Wight, which was celebrated in style when farmers, landowners and rural professionals gathered at Bowcombe Shoot Lodge last week. The new office supplements BCM's office at Sutton Scotney near Winchester and will be headed up by James Attrill who has joined BCM as a partner.

Henry McCowen, partner at BCM, welcomed guests saying, "This is a great move for BCM in terms of consolidation and opening new opportunities. We have progressively increased our client base on the Island and the opening of this office reflects our commitment to them and the Island. We are delighted that James has decided to become a partner in this venture which allows us to provide a comprehensive range of services to farmers, landowners and rural businesses on the Island".

James Attrill will operate predominately out of the new office at Dean Farm, Whitwell, but will also spend some time working from BCM's office at Sutton Scotney. James was previously an Associate Partner with Strutt & Parker based in Salisbury and latterly a Director of Christopher Scott Ltd based on the Island. He brings over twenty years of experience in giving land agency and farm business advice to clients across Southern England.

Henry McCowen added, "We have worked with James for many years and know he shares our work ethos and forward thinking approach to find profitable solutions for our clients whether that be in property sales, landlord and tenant issues, compensation claims, planning advice or any of our wide range of services".

Iain Curry, Senior Partner of BCM, comments: "This is a natural move for us and the new office offers us the ability to further expand our business and the opportunity to give a fuller range of services on the Isle of Wight than we currently provide. We are very excited that we will be working together".
