TOM'S NEW ROLE WILL STRENGTHEN RURAL TEAM

Experienced country house agent Tom Woods has joined BCM Rural Property Specialists to lead a strengthened residential sales and lettings department.

Tom, a graduate in rural land management from the Royal Agricultural University at Cirencester, joined a major national property agency at its Winchester office straight from his studies and has remained there for the last 15 years.

“Hampshire is an area I know well, having been born in Winchester and raised in the north of the county,” explains Tom. “It has some very exciting country houses and larger properties, many of which are homes that will never be on the sales market but which are very appealing in the residential lettings arena, particularly where they are within the catchments of or close to the many impressive schools with which the county is blessed.

“I felt that after 15 years with a national agency it was time to put my experience to good use building my career with an independent that has a positive outlook and I know that’s the case with BCM.

“My knowledge of the residential markets will help me nurture the residential department at BCM and its wider activities within rural consultancy and land management fit well with my time at university. BCM has clients across a wide area of southern England and my horizons will stretch well beyond the Hampshire borders, unfettered by the need to avoid treading on the toes of neighbouring branches, as happens with a major estate agency.

“I live in Hampshire with my wife and two young children in a village close to Winchester and will enjoy getting around the region developing residential opportunities.

“This weekend I will be heading to the Alresford Show with the rest of the BCM team, where I look forward to meeting existing BCM clients and forging new links with property owners and landlords.”
